

<<Back

Expert Teaching Parents Signs Of Trouble

Updated: Sep 28, 2007 05:24 PM

story by Alexis Vance KDBC 4 News

It happens everyday, children confronted at school asked to take drugs or join a gang. The problem is, the red flags of today's generation are more difficult to spot. That's why the Chaparral School District flew in an expert to help.

Stanford Graduate and Director of Operation No Gangs Rob Gallardo is working on minimizing the generation gap. Showing parents what household products are used to make drugs and talking about the newest trend, mixing codeine in pop cans. A combination where kids hallucinate and have enough energy to last thorough out the night.

Gallardo says this isn't happening on the nights or weekends, but actually when most parents least expect, "the times things will likely happen are 2:45pm to 5pm, statistics show negative activity typically occurs at those hours."

Gallardo says an easy way to keep tabs on your kids is to eat dinner together, know their friends, and always be open to talk.

All content © Copyright 2000 - 2009 WorldNow and KDBC. All Rights Reserved.
For more information on this site, please read our Privacy Policy and Terms of Service.

□

www.operationnongangs.org